BRITAIN'S annual drink bill has fallen from £301,000,000 in 1926 to £298,000,000 last year, according to a statement issued by the United Kingdom Alliance.

The reality of this decrease is emphasized by the fact that the available British wages fund in 1927 was substantially larger than that for the preceding 12 months

when the general strike and coal stoppage occurred. The beer con-sumption fell by 400,000 bulk bar-

For the Suite and the Keyboard Symphony, Paul Vellucci, who played recently at a Jordan Hall recital, joined the players. The members of contralto: Tudor Davies, tenor: Paul Honegger's "symphonic psalm" has been critically estimated on several occasions in this newspaper, and therefore requires no extended discussion now. But it must be said that the present writer found the work as performed yesterday much more impressive than it seemed to him when he first heard it at the Worcester Festival last fall. The eclectic nature of the composition was still apparent, and some of the pages still seemed jejune, but the genius of the director, working with an orchestra and a chorus both virtuosic and sensitively responsive, revealed a unity and an eloquence in the work which had not been apparent before. The soloists acquitted themselves creditably of their difficult tasks. Mr. Leyssac would have been more satisfying to one listener if he had Chase, Duveneck, Dearth, taken his part (except for the incantation) as that of a historian school. The real "stars" of the occasion were the members of the chorus, who gave not only "their services," as the program noted, but also, without reserve, their fresh voices and their young enthusiasm. Praise is due to Dr. Davison, who is responsible for their ensemble qualities; and above all to Mr. Koussefire of his imagination, added another artistic and popular triumph to the series which has made the last four seasons the most exciting in the recent history of the orchestra. There was a very large audience, and some-

March made by Tausig, there seemed little gain in spreading the various parts among six planes and a dozen planists. A reinforcement of tones and tone timbres added nothing to the hackneyed music beyond increasing its sonority and the velvety quality of the lower tones. Mr. Griselle, however, has succeeded in evolving some characteristic and effective music. His symphony, which he conducted, was light and gamesome, and scampered merrily through sections of broken rhythms which were frankly jazz. He divided his parts with skill and scattered ome cadenza-like solos through his score, giving several of the planists chance to show their abilities.

Hoover and Smith Lead in Poll of 39 Colleges

Herbert Hoover and Alfred E. Smith, Governor of New York, together polled more than threequarters of the votes in the countrywide university ballot, results of which have been announced by the Independent, a national weekly, published in Boston. The Secretary of Commerce with 22,086 votes, won almost half the undergraduate and faculty total in 39 colleges and universities. Governor Smith came in only a fair second with 13,534. Sena tor James A. Reed was runner up to the Democratic leader, with Vice-President Dawes and Frank O. Lowden trailing Mr. Hoover in order. Of the 70 publications invited by the Independent to represent their colleges in conducting the poll, approximately 45 accepted. And of this number 39 have reported final results with the rest delayed because of vacations and examination periods.

The 10 men, five Democrats and names not generally listed, approached 60,000. Among these, the "also rans" were Will Rogers, Mayor "Big Bill" Thompson of Chicago Colonel Lindbergh, Norman Thomas Senator Heflin of Alabama and President Butler of Columbia University.

We have nothing to say regarding the political situa-tion in India. Our whole concern was with the workers who are suffering to an intolerable degree. Nearly 300,-000,000 human beings in India are underfed, ill-fed and frightfully housed. Millions of bread-winners are sweated and fleeced. Poverty prewhich is almost inconceivable in the light of the country's wonder-

A. Fenner Brockway, secretary of the Independent Labor Party upon his arrival said: "The fact that all three Indian parties-Constitutional, Independents, and Nationalists, as well as the extreme Swarajists and the Trade Union Congress—are united in a boycott of the Commission is a proof of the overwhelming strength of the forces behind it. "There is no Indian party that counts outside these. Lord Birkenhead may say that the commission will carry on whether the Legisla-tive Assembly and provincial coun-cils co-operate or not, but any thinking person must realize that no new constitution for India can successfully operate without the goodwill of the representative Indian parties. It is to be hoped that negotiations will immediately be commenced for an unconditional round table conference with Indian representatives in the autumn when the commission re-turns to India."

The question is raised, what might have brought this about. Certain political circles are inclined to attribute the French Premier's atti-tude to J. P. Morgan's last visit to Paris. Hither to his speeches, especially those notorious Sunday addresses, delivered at the dedication of some war memorial, caused the greatest bitterness against France here, and led to the belief that M. Poincaré was the strongest opponent to Germany to rapprochement and peace.

The German national press is still trying to preserve this feeling here by employing scaring headlines. Dr. Gustav Stresemann recently said when he saw the headings given on M. Poincaré's recent speeches, he was alarmed but his misgivings soon made room for a feeling of gratifica-tion, when he read the speech. The more friendly feeling toward M. Poincaré is one of the most important developments in Germany during past weeks.

ISOLATION IS NECESSARY IN 222 CIRCUITS

Shield Grid Needs Impedance and By-Passing to Be Effective

Probably no tube that has been introduced in this country has created as much interest as the new 222. This tube, with its promise of greatly increased amplification at radio-frequencies, has created an unusual amount of discussion among set builders and experimenters.

The experience of a host of experimenters during the past two months indicates quite definitely that any real improvement in performance can only come as a result of careful design and a strict attention to the characteristics of the tube. If it is the negative filament terminal of the merely substituted in the present receiver poor results will inevitably

Those who have worked with the tube for some time, that is to say a year or more, while it was in the experimental stages assure us that nearly all of the problems can be summed up in one word "isolation." This isolation cannot be made too complete due to the sensitivity of the tube and the high amplification per stage that may be obtained.

The isolation usually includes thorough shielding to eliminate the coupling which might occur through inductances and capacitances, and in addition to this, complete isolation of the battery supply circuits. Some work along these lines has been done with receivers using the 201A type tube. All of these things, greatly refined, must be applied to the 222 type tube, and other precautions peculiar to this tube must be taken.

o this tube must be taken.

No coupling must be permitted hrough the plate circuit. To avoid his, a radio-frequency choke must be introduced into the circuit to give he high impedance or choking effect tecessary, and a high-grade by-pass condenser to provide the alternative of the strength of the stre through the plate circuit. To avoid this, a radio-frequency choke must be introduced into the circuit to give the high impedance or choking effect necessary, and a high-grade by-pass condenser to provide the alternative low-impedance path to the radio-frequency currents. To insure effective choking the choke should have a very low distributed capacity, and a Hammarlund choke having a capacity of three micro-micro farads may be

Many high capacity paper con-densers which are satisfactory at low or power frequencies are entirely unsatisfactory at radio-frequencies. Imperfections which are not evident when using direct or low-frequency alternating current become very important at radio-frequencies.

If a 1 mfd. by-pass condenser, such as the Parvolt Series A of this capacity, is used with a good choke, less than 1-100,000th of the radiofrequency current will go through the choke to the B supply circuit.

The shield plate of a 222 type tube has a mu or amplification constant of about 50 with respect to the plate. This means that any radio-frequency disturbance in this circuit is ampli-fied 50 times in the plate circuit. 10:35 Ernie Andrews and his troubs Needless to say no coupling can be 11:30 Time; weather. permitted through the supply cirto the shield. To overcome t current through the shield should be supplied through a resistance which has a low capacity between the terminals and which is non-inductive. It must have a con-stant resistance to prevent "frying" noises which would result from changes in current in this circuit.

This circuit should preferably be supplied through a 2000-ohm resistance of the leak type such as the Durham. A by-pass condenser of .5 or 1 mf. should then be connected from the Change of the second from the G terminal of the socket, which goes to the shield grid, to the negative filament lead.

Coupling through the grid circuit is much more difficult to eliminate.
A common C battery or source of bias should not be used if this can be avoided. If one is used, the grid circuit should be fed through a .1

In addition to the precautions

mentioned all possible precautions should be taken in an eliminator, if one is used, to eliminate the common coupling impedance. This requality condensers be shunted across the various B supply leads in the eliminator. In such a case the condenser requirement for minimum hum or modulation no longer becomes the controlling factor. much greater importance is the elimination of sources of coupling carefully shielded if it passes from through the supply.

CHANGE NORMAL FOR AMERICANS; NOT FOR BRITISH

Latter Seek Stability, Says Sir Josiah Stamp-Talks on Invention and Economics

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO GREENOCK, Scot.-Whether sociis organized in such a way as to take advantage of new inventions in industrial advance or whether the inventions which have revolutionized life in the last 150 years have had to fight against inertia and the opposition of vested interests was the subject of a discussion here recently Sir Josiah Stamp. The distinguished economist chose "Invention onomic Factor" as the subject for his Watt Anniversary Lecture, most of which was devoted to an analysis of the varying approach to invention by the British and American mentalities.

though Britain had been the home of invention in the early days of the industrial era, countless factors now combined to slow up the avidity with which such advances were wel-

Sir Josiah then discussed whether the difference in the American and British attitudes was necessarily the difference between individuals socialism, and continued, "If I had to sum up in a word, with no very great accuracy, the difference between the mentality of the British and American manufacturer, I should say that to the Briton, alive to the importance of progress and change, the period of reorganization and change-over in his methods and equipment is the exceptional period which he undergoes in order to en-joy a higher level. The state of staility is normal, and the state of change is exceptional.

"In the case of the American, the state of stability is not so much the normal as a brief period of rest for the next change, and a state of con-stant change is looked upon as itself normal. Such a difference in attitudes naturally has a practical expression in the attitude toward scrapping existing machinery."

The speaker declared that the gap between the two countries is not a continually lengthening one, but tends to remain fairly constant, so that eventually the slower will at least realize the standard of living progress was made. An Ancient Art

The art of depicting on earthenware scenes of historical interest was practiced by the Greeks with great beauty, and by the Romans. and for hundreds of years painting by hand was the method by which the potter chiefly decorated his ware. In England the art achieved a won derful degree of beauty. Josiah Wedgwood, in 1774, made a very or-nate service of ware, for every purpose of the table, for Catherine II, Empress of Russia. There were 952 pieces, containing over 1200 views of old castles and abbeys in England. Over 800 pieces of this service are known to be still in existence.

A method of printing on pottery had been devised about 20 years before the Russian service was made, but "as largely confined to tiles. Josiah Wedgwood was not long in adopting the printing process, and it was also used at an early date at that other notable center of the pottery industry in England, Worcester where a number of extremely beauti ful services for private use and collections in America have recently

The second demand is noninterference by Great Britain in the prodeclares it is able to afford.

The declaration amplifies the contents of the Egyptian reply to Lord Lloyd's note of March 4 and increases gravity of the crisis in which Nahas Pasha and the Wafd have involved reply was not unanimous, and before its dispatch the Egyptian Government unofficially consulted foreign non-British opinion.

The development is thus all the more surprising and seems to testify to the deliberate determination of the Wafd to force Britain's hand by officially and markedly ignoring the existence of the British declaration of 1922, which is the basis of the present régime of the country. This attitude is in keeping with the Wafd's behavior regarding the Sarwat-Chamberlain draft treaty.

It was learned today that Nahas never discussed with Sarwat the details of the proposed settlement, nor showed any desire or interest to investigate whether the draft was susceptible of further discussion with a view to finding a basis for a mutually agreeable solution. Instead the treaty was turned down summarily, apparently as the result of a deci-sion reached before knowing the Even Egyptian circles do not anticipate that Nahas will survive the complications which are bound to follow his latest action, and from many sides regret is expressed at the absence of the control and common sense of Zaghlul Pasha.

Britain Takes Calm View

LONDON—Downing Street is tak-ing a calm view of the demand by the Egyptian Premier, Nahas Pasha, for immediate complete independence, contained in his note and subsequent press declarations issued during the week end. His somewhat uncompromising tone is believed due to the exigencies of the local politi-cal situation, and confidence is ex-pressed that he does not want to pre-cipitate a crisis. His apparent dis-regard of the 1922 declaration, which has caused some comment in English

"THE HARVEST WAGGON"

Water-Color Annual in Chicago

By CHARLES FABENS KELLEY

color Exhibition at the Art Institute is now open. Possibly it is not so strong as last year in so far as the number of outstanding pictures is concerned. Including drawings in all media, the total number of pictures shown is 494, and as they are not crowded it will be seen that most two pen drawings of camels and their

The bulk of the work is, of course, American. Of the other works 59 are British, 2 Dutch, 33 French, 11 German, 3 Hungarian, 2 Polish, 10 Russian and 1 Spanish.

Taking the show as a whole it is of very high standard, but it should be. Nothing can be more utterly hopeless and discouraging than mediocre art.

Whorf and Heltland

There is no doubt that the British are the best craftsmen, and far more at home in the medium, but they do not attempt such ambitious flights as not attempt such ambitious flights as the American artist is constantly essaying. Perhaps for that very reason their performance is much more uniformly successful. There are no experiments of doubtful value in the British section, but neither are there any works as brilliant as are achieved by two brilliant young Americans. Whorf and Heitland, whose works are some of the high spots of the archibition. British section, but neither are there spots of the exhibition. As a whole the French water colors are anything tion. Americans are so rushed for time, are so efficient in all their activities, that they are expending a tremendous amount of effort in finding out how to make one brushstroke do the work of two. There are stroke do the work of two. There are ting of wire. For subject he takes force and brilliancy in most of the legendary men and fantastic animals American work, but also a rather and which would give that increasingly rare quality we call "charm."

The impressions are dashed. The impressions are dashed down at top speed with a colorful brush, at top speed with a colorful brush, and they are vigorous and free, but in the tilt of the head and sweep of too seldom of depth and true power. There seems, too, to be an aversion to choosing a subject that a layman would naturally like. There is, however, no morbidity, and the very freshness and directness of the medium seem to preclude the choice of deliberately unsavory subjects. Taken all in all the show is an ex-cellent one, and as usual will interest a larger public than the oil exhibitions largely on account of the greater cheerfulness of the color, and because most of the pictures would be very easy to live with.

prize of $600 and medal was awarded to John Whorf for his brilliantly painted "Bathers," with its figures in flashing sunlight and shadow. Mr. Whorf sent 13 pictures, all of dashing and colorful technique and well constructed. At present he has a predilection for vivid dark blues and violets, which occasionally seem obtrusive. As he is a prodigious worker and constantly developing, this obtrusiveness will doubtless be assimilated and overcome. prize of $600 and medal was awarded assimilated and overcome, Another Boston Prize Winner Another Boston painter, Alden Lasell Ripley, took the Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Logan prize of $300 and medal for his "Swedish Peasant Girls." Four brightly dressed young girls are sewing against a back-ground of green shade, with the sun splashing through in spots. Full of glowing color and direct brushwork, there is a sober and workmanlike quality about the painting that is very attractive and restful.

The Tuthill prize of $100 was given to Leonard Richmond for his "Old Houses, Verona, Italy." Mr. Richmond has seven pictures in the exhibition, and they are, as usual, bright and arresting, though I do not feel the freshness of his work of

One of the small galleries is given to the work of John T. Mc-Cutcheon, the brilliant cartoonist. It is all in pen and ink, and consists, almost entirely, of cartoons and humorous drawings for the Tribune. They are versatile in treatment, and, most of them, full of chuckles. His resourcefulness and quaint sense of the property in contrasting the styles of the styles. humor in contrasting the styles of to tay and yesterday are remarkable.

There are many drawings, among them a number by Fechin, whose highly sophisticated and mannered works in oils is well known. His drawings have much charm and would have more, if he were not so determined to be whimsical and difdetermined to be whimsical and unterent. They are in charcoal on rough grayish paper, and there is much delicacy in the delineation which is too often obscured by petty mannerisms.

This hint, some feel is contained in dens in Pittsburgh recently when he said in part:

The trouble with art these days is that the great American people are never satisfied unless they have got a stunt. Paintings are not just er them on the war in and year them ought to be. They are a tellectual stunts these days. We tay was as we want them on the war in and year out, and we to them instead to supplant the way worn-out, dear out, and we to supplant the how worm-out, dear old cross-word puzzle. Also, as soon as we have mastered one puzzle we are bored with it and we want another still more difficult. Then, to other still more difficult. Then, to carry my point a bit farther, we fail to have technical stunts any more because technique has been carried to the nth power. So we become bored again and we want a stunt called punch. For a time we all obtain a certain pleasure out of it. But ultimately we become rather fagged and seek a rest, so we swing back toward technique. As a matter of fact, that is the way the pendulum is going at present.

Little Snow-Maid

By GERTRUDE DE ROULOWE

PERHAPS you think that it is no time to be talking about snow-maidens, now that spring is at hand when the air is full of bird songs and the meadows gayly decked with flowers. But, as a matter of fact, that is exactly the time of the Snow-Maid, for, just as these voices than at Sunbeam's. She King Winter was her father, so her mother is the fair and gentle Spring: and for many days little Snow-Maid, a happy child, danced between them,

Finally, however, there came a day when King Winter, with his frosts and blustering winds, said "Good-by" to little Snow-Maid and her mother, Spring, and hurried away her mother, Spring, and hurried away to his icy castle in the north, and another king, called Golden Sun, ruled in the land.

Then came adventurous days for little Snow-Maid. Spring had a great deal of work to do for King Golden Sun, and Snow-Maid was left much to herself. But she was very happy, and for a long time played merrily to herself. But she was very happy, and for a long time played merrily with the wreath of sweet pink arbutus that Spring had given her. However, as King Golden Sun spread out his yellow robes from day to day, and shook the warm air from them, Snow-Maid began to feel sleepy, and finally settled down comfortably in the shade of a tall hedge fortably in the shade of a tall hedge for a little nap. But she had scarcely shut her sparkling eyes when along came little Sunbeam and poked his tiny fingers into her white cheek.

Sunbeam's Fingers "Wake up! Wake up, Snow-Maid!" for the new king—wake up and help!"

"I am helping," said Snow-Maid, sleepily, stretching out her white arms, "I am helping, and I'm so sleepy! Go away, Sunbeam, you make me sleepier than ever."
"Helping!" exclaimed Sunbeam,
"I'd like to know what you're doing help, just sleeping under this

"I'm keeping the earth warm," said Snow-Maid, drowsily. "Please go away, Sunbeam."
"Ho, Ho!" twinkled Sunbeam, "that was all right when Winter reigned, but now that the Golden Sun te king it's my husiness to warm Sun is king it's my business to warm the earth. You must find some other work to do. I'll tell you what, Snow-

Maid, you can water the earth while I warm it—we will work together."
"Water the earth!" said SnowMaid, looking at Sunbeam with startled eyes. "How can a SnowMaid water the earth? No, no! I

It was a long time before Sunbeam found her again, but at last he chanced upon her on the hillside, in a hollow of the rocks. Her little white feet were resting on a bank of white feet were resting on a bank of where she would, little Sunbeam's voice searched her out. "Wake up, wake up, Snow-Maid! Wake up and help! Water the earth, while I warm it!"

Dear little Snow-Maid! Times were changed indeed from Winter's reign now that Golden Sun was king. Times were changed, but Snow-Majd did not understand that she must change with them. And so, day after day, she drew back farther and farther into the greenwood, where it was cool and dark, hiding away from Sunbeam's tiny fingers and the sound of his merry voice bidding her wake up and water the earth. How could a Snow-Maid water the earth, indeed!

She must keep it warm! Her Last Hiding Place

And now the days grew warmer. The May-queen had been crowned long since. The sweet flag lilies stood tall and straight beside the meadow stream, and the flowering grass was almost ready for the mow-er's scythe. Little Snow-Maid had reached her last hiding place deep in the greenwood. Stretched out on the moss in the hollow shelter of a fallen tree, she slept away the warm late days of spring, while the timid fawn nibbled the red berries of the wintergreen that fell from her white hands. How delightfully cool and quiet it was! A little rabbit, scurrying through the woods, trod noise-lessly upon her white frock, but she did not wake. "I'm keeping the earth warm," she murmured as she moved in her sleep. It was her last hiding place, and Sunbeam, who was looking for her everywhere, had not yet discovered it. She was too far away to hear it. She was too far away to hear his merry voice with its, "Wake up, wake up, Snow-Maid! Wake up and help! Water the earth while I warm it."

But, although she no longer heard Sunbeam's voice, presently she began to hear other little voices that seemed to come from underneath the moss on which she lay.

"Let us out please, Snow-Maid," they said, "let us out into the warm air. It is cold down here! You kept us warm when the north wind blew, but now the Golden Sun is king. We know it. Other little Snow-Maids have come down into the earth to be seen peeping forth. Gathering pussy willows is always wonderful fun for everybody, and even those children who live in the large cities can usually find them very reasonably priced at the florist's.

Snow-Maid opened her sparkling eyes. She was even more startled at these voices than at Sunbeam's. She had thought that she was warming the flowers hidden in their roots underground, but she was merely keeping them shut up in the cold. She moved uneasily. What was she to do; How could a Snow-Maid water the earth? But she was ready, now she crayons to suit once with a present the picture, which may then be finished with pen and ink or colored been the picture, which may then be finished with pen and ink or colored been the picture, which may then be finished with pen and ink or colored been the picture, which may then be finished with pen and ink or colored been the picture, which may then be finished with pen and ink or colored been the picture. kept her eyes wide open, and she crayons to suit one's fancy. The Reading Hour

And wind goes whispering by, When stars are dancing one by one Across the deepening sky, Beside the fire we take our books Of story and of rhyme;

O! Nicest part of day, I think, Is dusk—and reading time!

When lamps are lighted in the street, | When we have put our toys to bed And done with all our play, Then Tinkle Twee beside me sits And looks at pictures gay; The wind goes "wishie" round the house And blows the soft spring rain

With pitter patter, pitter pit, Against our windowpane. We never need to take a shin

Accomplishments of Refinancing

By exchanges, conversions or refunding operations, $70,000,000 par value of underlying securities in the Associated System have been retired. This is part of a comprehensive program designed to simplify the Company's capital structure, increase its credit, and effect savings in interest charges.

For the holder of Associated Gas & Electric securities, it has the following advantages:

- 1. Substantial savings through elimination of high coupon bonds and high
- dividend rate preferred stocks of subsidiary properties. 2. Savings in taxes, franchise charges and personnel through grouping of
- 3. Savings in bookkeeping and accounting expense through retirement of numer-
- 4. Acquisition of 100% ownership of all properties and elimination of diverse minority interests in subsidiaries
- 5. Elimination of numerous mortgage securities. Such remaining issues total less than 12% of the entire capitalization. Many properties are entirely free
- 6. Elimination of early bond maturities, leaving the management free to devote
- its energies for many years to come to building up the business.
- 7. Increase in the credit standing of the Associated System, as evidenced by recent financing through 41/2% bonds as against 51/2% bonds a year ago.
- 8. Creation of a large reservoir of mortgage credit for use to expand and develop
- the properties if essential. The securities of the Associated Gas & Electric Company have been brought close to the actual physical property and receive all the income from opera-

New England Power Association, a Massachusetts Voluntary Association, formed under a Declaration of Trust dated January 2, 1926, and containing the usual provisions confining liability to the Trust assets, is the holding and financing vehicle for properties located in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island comprising the New England Power System. These properties constitute the largest power system in the New England States and distribute annually over 880,000.000 kilowatt hours of electric energy to a group of highly industrialized centers which are connected by a comprehensive network of high tension lines. Power is generated in eleven hydro-electric and six steam plants advantageously located to permit effective and economical transmission throughout the territory served, and through interconnection with large hydro-electric and steam generating plants of other companies in southern New England and New York State, the New England Power System is able to purchase large amounts of primary and surplus power that these plants have available. Over 250 communities having a population in excess of 2,500,000 are served by the System either directly or through contracts with local

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO MONTREAL, Que.—A scoring flash which produced two goals in 10 seconds in the second period of Saturay night's game between the two local professional teams, Maroons and Canadiens, for the title of the Cana-dien group of the National Hockey League gave the former a 2-to-2 tie with the group leaders, the third tie with the group leaders, the third tie with the group leaders, the third tie No. 3—W. A. Sackman Capt. J. N. Caperton played this season. As a result, the team to qualify for the final and the Stanley Cup series depends on Tuesday night's game as does possession of the George Kennedy Trophy, emblematic of the city professional championhip. So far this season the clubs have broken even, each winning two games.

The Canadiens deserved the victory, as they had a great margin on the territorial play and would have won by several goals but for the brilliant playing of Benedict in the Maroons'

net. Penalties played a big part in the scoring of three goals.

Canadiens scored the first when playing six men against three, Leduc making full use of a pass from Gagne in the corner. After Canadiens had increased their lead to two goals through a Gardiner-to-Gagne play increased their lead to two goals through a Gardiner-to-Gagne play they looked like certain winners, but midway through the second period three Canadiens were penalized and the Maroons made the most of the advantage in man power. Ward scored on a pass from Munro and 10 seconds later Smith went down and as the Canadiens' defense backed toward the goal, snapped the rubber between them and Hainsworth did not see the shot.

Maroons' defense, with Benedict being more brilliant than at any preing more brilliant than at any previous time this season, held out the Canadiens for the remainder of the game. The summary: MONTREAL well as football in the middle West before coming to Oregon State.

During the spring football practice season from Feb. 1 to the middle of March, Assistant Coach Richard Newman had charge of the trackmen. Newman is also a product of the middle West, having starred in track at University of Nebraska. Another middle westerner, Russell Perry, now professor of agricultural engineering at Oregon State, but formerly a distance star at University of Wisconsin, is assisting. Professor Perry, is yoluntawest record in the shotput last season

The new plan followed in track training this season is having an assistant coach in charge of a particular group of events. Both freshmen and varsity prospects are handled by the same man in his events. More than 13 track men, including both varsity and freshmen, reported

Slightly more than half of these are varsity material. Of the 17 track men who received letters last season only clude Melvin Whitlock '29, who holds the northwest javelin record with a distance of 190ft. 4in.; Ralph Twitchell '29, Harlan Striff '28, W. O. Joos '28,

India Player Shows Promise as Davis Cup Candidate

BOMBAY—The United Provinces' lawn tennis team has won the All-India Inter-Provincial lawn tennis tourament this year for the first time defeating the Punjab in final stages 3 matches to 2. Both teams displayed a high standard of tennis. The result of the match hinged on the doubles, for the singles' honors were evenly divided. The biggest surprise that has been caused for some time in lawn tennis circles here was the outcome of the first day's play in the tourney when L. S. Deans, of the United Provinces, administered to the Japanese Suttao Okamoto, the Bengal singles' champion, his first defeat in competitive tennis in Bengal by 6—4, 5—7, 7—5. Deane has the distinction of being the only player from India to Wright taking every chance to score, go into a final at Wimbledon. He has represented India in the Davis Cup points off the tambour and in the coragainst France at Paris, where he defeated Jacques Brugnon in five sets, and in 1923 he played for India against Japan at Chicago in 1921; and in 1923 he played for India against Ireland at Dublin. He is the only player in India who has beaten both Zenzo Shimizu and Okamoto.

Another big surprise was when Raghubir Dayal, United Provinces, defeated Okamoto on the following day.

Defeats W. C. Wright for U. S. Court Tennis Honors at 6-2, 6-4, 6-3

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU NEW YORK-Hewitt Morgan of New York, is the new court tennis champion of the United States. In a brilliant match that proved his complete superiority as a court craftsman over William C. Wright of Philadelphia, he defeated the younger player in straight sets, on the championship court of the New York Racquet and Tennis Club, on Saturday afternoon. The score was 6—2, 6—4, 6—3.

Tennis Club, on Saturday afternoon. Tennis Club, on Saturday afternoon. The score was 6—2, 6—4, 6—3.

It was accuracy of stroke and an ability to control his shots so as to prevent Wright from playing his usual game that gave Morgan the superlority, rather than any aggressive style of play. Only occasionally did the winner display any particular style of service, such as the railroad service that gave Jay Gould his greatest asset when he was champion. But when it came to handling the returns which Wright sent back over the net on service, Morgan was always ready for a shot that would not permit the Philadelphian, who is noted for his olleying ability and for service, to get

THIS is the last full week of training that major-league teams will have before the regular seasons open. Signs of activity are seen in the West, with the Pacific Coast League teams opening their schedule tomorrow. The Coast League is the first in organized baseball to get under way. The Coast League has inaugurated a split season this year, the first half running 13 weeks. Other minor leagues are preparing to get into action. The American Associa-tion starts one week after the Pacific Coast League opens, the International League opens on Wednesday, April 18, and the Southern Association starts the same day as the American Association, on April 10.

News of college baseball activities is also strong. The University of Vermout, College of City of New York, Universities of Maryland and Virginia have already inaugurated their seasons. Many others are scheduled to swing into action this week.

Northwestern University's baseball team started on an 1800-mile tour of the South Sunday.

Fans are still waiting for the first home runs to be hit by Ruth and Gehrig. Both are showing somewhat better form as the days go by, and this is helping to lift the Yankees out of a bad batting slump which they have been in most of the training period. The Pittsfield baseball club, which was practicing at Fenway Park last week, will get four of the Boston Red Sox recruits. They are Frank Bushey, pitcher; Edward Connolly, catcher, and G. H. Loepp and Charles Small, infielders.

The term coterie has sometimes been badly used to denote a circle of followers or imitators, as in "The actor was always surrounded by a coterie of admirers." "Group" or "body" or "party" would have been more

Dickie, "it's all her fault!" "You know that isn't true," said Betty, "and you are perfectly horrid." That was earlier, and now Dickie was lying in bed with his eyes shut, thinking hard, and wondering how he could possibly manage to feel better without going up to Betty's room and telling her he was sorry, when a voice from the window said loudly:

"I'm fed up!" Dickie sat up instantly and looked in the direction of the voice, but could see nothing.

"Absolutely fed up," repeated the voice.
"Why?" asked another voice

somewhere in the direction of the fireplace.
"Because I have had nothing but scowls again tonight. I'm losing my good looks entirely, and soon won't be fit to be

"That's a pity," replied the second voice. "I wonder what can be done about it?" Dickie gazed anxiously about the room wondering where the voices could possibly be coming from; when, all of a sudden, a shaft of light fell upon the looking-glass in the window, and to tear-stained face was looking across at him from out of the mirror. "Who are you?" he asked in surprise. "Dickie Merrill," answered the looking-glass in Dickie's own voice. "I'm fed up!"

"You have every reason to be." replied the other voice, and looking round Dickie saw in another glass over the mantelpiece, a very dim outline of a face star-ing reproachfully at nim. "Who are you?" he asked, still more surprised.

The Law of Kindness Lowell, Mass. GENTLEMAN and his two sons had just returned to a A city where they had formerly lived, but where industrial conditions seemed to be so depressing that thousands of people were being obliged to find employment in other places. When it was noticed that the two sons found employment almost immediately upon their return, this fact elicited so much comment that the father was finally prevailed upon to tell the following incidents which, he was convinced, explained the sit-

The employment of one son, he said, might be traced to a winter a number of years before when one of his friends, a chemist in a factory, had found himself in great need. His wife had apparently required much attention, and being unable to find anyone to take care of her, the mist had acted as nurse while still attending to his daily work until he seemed unable to keep up. Hearing of the circumstances, the speaker said he told his wife and she immediately volunteered to go through the deep snow to take care of the chemist's household, while he got along as best he could in his own home with the help of a neighbor. Now that the oppor-tunity had come to return the kindness, the chemist apparently was glad to find an opening for

He was cared for in a cabin in the yard of his friend, and later, after a removal to another locality, in the house of the former Confederate soldier.

Counting the Unemployed

NTIL Secretary Davis's report on unemployment in the United States was published, all sorts of rumors on the subject were prevalent. Naturally, the Senate, like everybody else, wanted exact information and called on Mr. Davis for his estimate. After three weeks the Secretary of Labor replied that the shrinkage in the volume of wage earners, over and above the number out of work in the "normal" year 1925, was 1.870,000.

With this report the business world sighed in partial relief, not because the estimate was small-for Mr. Davis himself said the matter was "serious," though apparently the worst was over-but because the federal figure limited gossip and localized all future disputes in the Senate to a reasonable margin of doubt round the Davis analysis.

With so much at stake to business and labor, and with the need for exact information, why cannot the Government furnish monthly, or at least quarterly, unemployment reports, similar to the latest Davis estimate? The answer is: It can, but it will cost money. Monthly reviews are now issued, but in skeletonized form, Mr. Davis says it will cost $100,000 for additional details. Few investments would seem to promise greater returns in business confidence. It is the uncertainty of such matters as extent of unemployment which may cause business collapse and panic through sheer misinformation.

There are other reasons for the expenditure. The United States has lagged behind other nations in the field; and even some of the seven states now making individual surveys spend three or four times as much as Washington in the work. Today the sorting of all the federal data on national employment is done in two rooms, in a division of the Labor Department, by nine employees, at a total cost, including overhead, of only $18,500 annually. This seems pitifully inadequate. During the war $40,000 more was available, but this was lopped off, apparently on the assumption that the service was needed only in such an emergency.

Even in the latest detailed Davis survey, a careful study discloses statistical gaps which can be filled in future only by larger appropriations regularly applied. Doubtless Senator Wagner of New York will claim that these "gaps" support his original contention that 4,000,000 are out of work. In the first place, the Davis figure of 1,870,000 is admittedly not the total yed. It must be ad ded to the num ber of idle workers in 1925. Economists figure that even in "normal" years, like 1925, 1,000,000 may be out of work. Add this to the Davis estimate, and you approach 3,000,000. Then again, Mr. Davis mentions 2,000,000 boys and girls who reach working age each year. How many of this class have been looking for jobs since 1925, in vain? Figures are simply not available. There are other gaps. For instance, the available funds permit a study of only two great industries. Conditions found in these two are "assumed" to exist in other industries. Money to secure more accurate and regular surveys would seem to be money well spent.

Great Britain and Egypt

VEN if the lengthy negotiations for the settlement of the outstanding points at issue between Great Britain and Egypt have not resulted in an agreement, the fact that it has at last been found possible to put on paper a draft treaty which can form the basis of further discussion is in itself a distinct step in advance.

The chief stumblingblock on this occasion has once again been the old difficulty of the location of the British troops deemed essential for the protection of the Empire's communications through the Suez Canal. Military opinion in London has hitherto been practically unanimous that the defense of the canal could not be organized effectively if the troops were withdrawn from the interior of Egypt. That this view is in process of modification is clear from the fact that the proposed treaty contains a provision whereby the location of the British garrison would ultimately be fixed by the League Council, which would be under no obligation to uphold the thesis of British strategists.

The control of the Sudan, which is always looked upon as of vital importance by Egyptians, owing to its geographical situation astride of their only water supply, was left temporarily in abeyance by the rejected Sarwat-Chamberlain agreement. This issue was, however, exhaustively dealt with in the preliminary negotiations, when it was made clear that Sarwat himself believed it would be possible to find a solution based on some system of joint control by England and Egypt.

The immediate repercussions of the failure of the negotiations should not be taken too seriously. The recent riots even do not appear, as had been the case on some previous occasions, to have been instigated by leading members of the still dominant political party, but to have been mainly the work of students acting in defiance of those leaders' advice. While it would be unwise to forecast that a solution is in sight, the situation would seem to be more encouraging than it has been at any time in the past ten years. It is distinctly significant that the thoughts of educated Egyptians are said to be turning more and more to the economic development of their country, and less and less to political acerbities. Already under their first installment of independence the Egyptian Parliament has found a number of useful outlets for its activities, notably in the direction of improved education for the masses of the people. There is, however, much still to be done which can only be accomplished in friendly collaboration with Great Britain, and it is in the best interests of both countries to come as soon as possible to an amicable arrangement based on mutual concessions.

Is Mr. Roper's Plan Feasible?

UT of the medley of uncertainty which surrounds the political situation in the United States at the moment there has emerged from the Democratic camp a proposal which offers, if it is seriously considered, a unique solution of what the partisans opposed to Tammany rule seem to have regarded as an almost hopeless situation. The proposal is made by Daniel C. Roper, a former lieutenant in the forces supporting William G. McAdoo, that by the consent of Smith and anti-Smith leaders, a complete reorganization of campaign plans be agreed upon, with the result that the nomination of Governor Smith for the Presidency be postponed definitely for eight years, and that the party unite in supporting, now and four years hence if successful in the coming election, a candidate unequivocally committed to the enforcement of the prohibition law.

Evidently, Mr. Roper and those whose counsel he may have invited are convinced that the American voters will refuse to elect any presidential candidate who is avowedly opposed to prohibition and who would condone a policy of nullification, either by violation of the law or through legislative action. This is daily becoming more and more evident. Some of the Democratic Party leaders admit that the success of a wet candidate must depend upon a divided party vote. With enforcement as the issue in the coming campaign, and with that issue clearly defined, the party putting forward a wet candidate must do so with the realization that all existing party lines will be, for the time being, virtually obliterated. But Mr. Roper and those who may be advising him in this somewhat heroic undertaking should take no unfair advantage of their fellow partisans. They propose, it is voted, that if after eight years it is not found possible to bring about a reasonable or satisfactory enforcement of the law, then the dry Democrats will join their wet brethren in an effort to elect a President who will encourage the repeal of the law. Upon its face the offer is fair enough, despite the fact that the bargain is one which would never be fulfilled. Eight years of courageous enforcement of the law, beginning now or next year, would so firmly establish prohibition as an institution that there would be no thought of attempting its overthrow. The irreconcilables whose consent Mr. Roper seeks to gain probably will decline to lend their aid to such a plan.

"The Campaign to Overthrow"

EUROPEAN government ordinarily is A overthrown either by new parliamentary elections or when a majority of the members of Parliament vote against a measure proposed by a Cabinet. In Rumania neither of these contingencies is imminent. The Parliament, which has just been elected, contains an overwhelming majority which supports the present Cabinet. Nevertheless, an opposition coalition has begun a violent "campaign to overthrow" the Government.

The main aggressors are the leaders and members of the National-Peasant Party, a political group composed largely of peasants and of people in the annexed provinces, especially in Transylvania. Socialists on the "Left' and a group of intellectuals on the "Right" are co-operating with them. The campaign consists largely of a series of largely attended mass meetings held in all parts of Rumania. The Government, as a counter-attack, has also launched a series of similar mass meetings.

The press, on the whole, supports the "campaign to overthrow," most of the papers publishing vehement articles thereon. A censorship exists, but the papers seem to be quite free. Just how this "campaign" can meet with success it is not easy to see, and most objective observers are inclined to be skeptical as to results. The Regency has no formal nor parliamentary reason to dismiss the present Cabinet and no reason to dissolve the Assembly. What effect can mass meetings, speeches, articles, editorials and caricatures have on a well-established government?

One can only say that the Government appears calm and resolute, and the opposition irreconcilable and irrepressible, while many people await the spring with apprehension.

Educational Difficulties in Japan

FFORTS are being made to eradicate one of the most pernicious features of the educational world in Japan, that of the competitive entrance examination, and Japanese educators and Government officials are experimenting with substitutes which will prove effective. The student in the United States preparing to enter college or university has no conception of the trials through which the Japanese student in similar circumstances must pass. Japan's educational institutions, from the kindergarten to the university, are utterly inadequate to meet the demands made upon them. It is no infrequent occurrence for 1000 candidates to take entrance examinations to some school which cannot admit more than 200 or 250 of them. Naturally, the resultant competition is extreme. Moreover, social custom in Japan attaches disgrace to the student failing to pass the examinations, so that needless punishment is added.

Japan has long recognized the drawbacks of the system as it exists, and has admitted the imperative necessity of rectifying it. This year, for the first time, candidates for entrance to the middle schools, which correspond to the junior high schools of this country, are not required to take written examinations. Instead, they are judged on their past scholastic record plus, certain so-called mental tests. Flaws in this system are evident, and it is reported that in many cases teachers have been strongly influenced by the family position of the students whom they have indorsed. The men who have made a lucrative livelihood by operating special schools for coaching students for the examinations have risen to the occasion, and are flooding the market with books and pamphlets telling how to pass the alleged mental tests.

Further experimentation is to be conducted by Japanese educators, and it is quite possible that they will be able to do away with the worst aspects of the system. The trouble is more basic, however, than the system itself. It is financial. Japan is not willing to spend the money needed for the schools which the Japanese people demand. There are few if any peoples who place so high a value on education as do the Japanese. It seems incomprehensible that the educational authorities are not able to obtain sufficient funds to provide educational facilities for all seeking them.

"Standing Up or Lying Down"

OMMODITY dollars and vertical and horizontal trusts undoubtedly have their place in the scheme of big business, but to the average layman, whose greatest financial problem is his income tax blank, they convey little or no more meaning than a Christmas tree on the Fourth of July. His interest is largely in the common one-dollar bill, and he doesn't care much whether the trusts conduct their activities standing up or lying down.

Recent conditions in the stock market in the United States have brought into prominence a great many financial terms which are as confusing to the average reader as the report of a baseball game to an Australian cricket player. Ordinarily the daily doings of the stock and commodity markets are confined to the financial pages of the daily newspapers. Here they are in their own home, so to speak, and only those especially interested need enter and wander around among such mystical terms as "shorts and longs," "bulls and bears," "stiffening of time money," "long fed Nebraska heavyweights" and "top wooled lambs."

But when such startling conditions as recently appeared bring the stock market article out of its own home on the financial page and place it alluringly before first-page readers, a man unversed in all these suspicious-looking phrases is likely to think either that his college education has been a failure or that some strange alien language has been adopted to give an especial and spectacular emphasis to the gyratory activities the market has exhibited.

Awarding Athletic Letters

THE decided innovation in the rewarding of members of college athletic teams which the University of Illinois is to put into effect with the opening of its 1928-29 season next fall will be watched with much interest by those in charge of college affairs as well as by the members of the various teams which are to be affected. The new plan is to award athletic letters to members of all teams on the same basis instead of on the basis of some sports being of major classification and others of minor, as is now the case in all the big colleges.

There are two ways in which this change in award is expected to prove its worth. One is in an increased interest in the minor sports and the other is in a possible lessening of the overemphasis which has developed in college sports. The letter which has been given to a member of a major team has been regarded as one of the most highly prized of all the awards, and it is believed by some that by putting the award for all other sports on the same level the value of the former award will be less emphasized.

Then again—and this seems to be the most likely benefit to be gained-it is expected to increase interest in the minor sports and to result in a greater number of students trying to make those teams. This should not only result in better teams; but it should also help along the athletics-for-all movement which the colleges are trying to foster.

There is probably no phase of intercollegiate athletics which appeals more to the undergraduate than the winning of his letter. It is more highly valued than any prize that can be won, and with the member of every team winning an insigne of major value, the general athletic situation is more than likely to be improved. To have such a large university as Illinois start the innovation is sure to give it a satisfactory trial and will show whether it is of sufficient value to warrant general adoption.

Editorial Notes

News of another transatlantic flight has been brought to light by Nature Magazine, which states that on Oct. 1, 1927, an arctic tern was found at La Rochelle, France, its right foot carrying an aluminum band numbered 548,656 and inscribed: "Notify Biol. Surv." Records showed that the band was placed upon the foot of the bird when it was not more than five days out of the shell, at Red Islands, Labrador, on July 22, 1927. In a straight line from Labrador to the coast of France are 4200 miles of ocean. Certainly not a bad flight for a youngster of three and one-half months.

What have those to say, who have been claiming that football players are much below other undergraduates in their scholastic marks, regarding the three juniors who were being relied upon for the Washington and Jefferson College football eleven next fall, but who have been lost to the team because their scholastic marks are so good that they will be graduated this June?

The latest adaptation of the turning of swords into plowshares is found in the use by Idaho farmers of 1,500,000 pounds of high explosive manufactured during the war to clear 6000 acres of land of stumps.

Another proof of the progress of Western civilization: American experts, invited by the Raw Silk Association of Japan, are on their way to the Orient to teach the Nipponese about silk.

The Ostensible in Bee Hunting

THERE was a smile dancing in the high lights of Avery's eyes. There was a smile hovering in the corners of Julia's mouth. There was a smile, too, in the sunlight that flooded the low farm buildings which nestled behind a group of maples bordering that dusty Vermont highway. Avery whistled a measure cheerfully Vermont highway. Avery whistled a measure cheerfully out of key. Julia hummed an old melody quite in key The sun played vast harmonies in the azure dome of sky

Rover lay asleep under a bench near the woodshed door. Downy puffs of clouds, pink tinted, immersed in sunlight, dozed the midday hour away, above verdant Green Mountain bluffs which, rising behind the farm, made of the horizon a near neighbor. A symphony was in the making—a symphony of light and color and myriad tones and shadows-welling from the warm earth, flooding from the calm sky, blending into one grand theme whose simple motif, caught up by a host of insect voices, rose and swelled and shrilled endlessly on, piping high cheer to right merry noon.

Aye, it was a day! A day in which such as do not lie on their backs in open fields and dream magnificently must needs be actively abroad with imagination's arms wide stretched to impressions. On such days Avery went bee hunting-ostensibly. Since he had been bee hunting on occasion each summer and, as yet, Julia was unfamiliar with the flavor of wild honey, it may be presumed that Avery's designs on the honey makers were not wholly acquisitive. Indeed, one suspects that bee hunting furnished an excuse rather than an incentive for his rhapsodical peregrinations.

Presently he emerged from the woodshed with the paraphernalia of the chase under his arm. A tracker of less elusive game might smile at accouterment so unpretentious, for it consisted of nothing more subtle than an ancient tripod and a small, flat, glass-covered box containing a daub of strained honey. Avery, however, seemed quite content. And he sang as he paused there in the honest sunlight; sang a tune of rich good humor to words which have come buzzing down the years from the seventeenth century:

> How doth the little busy bee Improve each shining hour And gather honey all the day From every opening flower.

And, still singing, the tripod projecting jauntily from under his arm, the honey box dangling negligently at his side, he passed through the dappled shade of the great maples, crossed the dusty highway with swinging stride, vaulted a stone fence on the far side of the road and pushing his way through a field of timothy star-flecked with daisies, turned his steps toward the distant wood. Here Julia, watching from the rare old doorway, turned to Rover, who had long ago put aside such immature pursuits as bee hunting, and remarked with tolerant amiability: "Boy, all boy; bless him." Whereupon, in emulation of the industrious bee, she turned with brisk efficiency to her housewifely tasks.

4 4 4 Avery paused at the edge of the forest. Coming through the field he had been aware of an unvoiced song weaving rhythmically in and out through the shuttle of his stride. It had to do with daisies, he knew—something dainty and fine Bliss Carman had written. Odd how pervasive was the meter and yet how elusive were the words. Leaning his tripod against a tree, he gazed back down the grassy

A vagrant breeze puffed over the meadows in long undulations. The sun flashed white ridges across the grassy waves, and yellow butterflies rose from the green swell like foam from wind-tossed billows. Overhead feathered choristers sang blithe anthems to summer. "Ho," thought Avery, "now we have it!"

Over the shoulders and slopes of the dunes I saw the white daisies go down to the sea. . . .

The bobolinks rallied them up from the dell, The orioles whistled them out of the wood. And all of their saying was: "Earth, it is well!" And all of their dancing was: "Life, thou art good!"

And, well pleased with the song and the singer, he picked up his tripod and turned down a wood road which wound invitingly through the shadows.

Now, a wood road, like a garden, is a "lovesome thing,"

Despite the moist odor of old leaves, and sundry timid rustlings in the bush that lined the way, and tiny clover blossoms nodding where they had imprisoned the sunlight in dozens of twinkling yellow globes, and clumps of wild columbine, and star flowers, and solemn jacks-in-the-pulpit -despite these, and a score of other wild, tender things, bees remained.

Leisurely testing the flavor of young wintergreen leaves as he went, Avery munched his way down into the hollow where the woodland brook gurgled loquacious invitations to partake of its cool magic, then climbing the slope beyond, he presently emerged into the sunlight. Simultaneously the bee thoughts swarmed from their hive in couplets of Richard Watson Gilder's fashioning and Avery found himself fair humming:

Above the trees the honey bees swarm by with buzz and And in the field and garden a thousand blossoms bloom.

So there in the sun where the meadow rolled into the valley Avery set up his tripod, placed a little of the strained honey on the glass top of the box, placed the box on the tripod and, turning back to the edge of the wood, he sought

Just where the field and forest meet and, pulling a dog-eared book of verse from his pocket, leaned against the bole of an ancient elm to await the

Presently he looked up from his reading. The bees had arrived—large fellows; two of them. He gave them time sufficient to pack their loads of sweetness, then tiptoed to the tripod. The buzzing pair arose heavily from their feast. In spirals they sought the upper air; then, straight as a die, darted off toward a distant wooded height. Avery followed with his eyes. He marked a weathered pine, silhouetting its bare branches against the sky line, and returned to his shade and his book. Other bees came. Avery repeated the operation. Again a string of honeybearers marked an airline from tripod to ancient pine. 'Ah," smiled Avery, "I have the direction; now to locate

So he packed his tripod and, returning the book to his pocket, moved down across the valley to a pasture where black-and-white cattle waded contentedly in the shadowed creek. Here, above the stream, where sunbeams sprayed the short-cropped grass, he again arranged his hunting apparatus and sought the shade of a spreading oak for further perusal of his book.

And the bees came and rose and darted away, while Avery read on. The strained honey was nearly all devoured before he again bethought himself of his quest. And so again to the tripod, where, noting the circuitous ascent and the sudden straight line followed by the remaining bees, he observed that the angles drawn by the bees on the hillside and those in the hollow converged at the barren pine. "Eureka!" cried he. "Within you pine is good wild honey!" Then, shattering all heretofore known practices in the proper art of bee-hunting, he leisurely returned to his book. And presently he turned to Katherine Tynan's lines:

Very good in the grass to lie And see the network 'gainst the sky, A living lace of blue and green. And boughs that let the gold between.

And the shadows lengthened, and the crickets began to cheep and frogs tuned their fiddles in distant bogs. So Avery yawned and stretched and turned homeward, completely satisfied with the results of the chaseglorying in the ostensible in bee hunting.

But Julia, watching from the old colonial doorway, saw him returning through the dew and, turning to Rover, remarked: "Rover, we shall have biscuits and honey for supper—honey I bought from the grocer today." For when Julia says honey she does not mean-ostensibly.

Another Testimony

THE numerous accounts regarding prohibition and its effects upon our population lead me to send to you some observations daily afforded me as one of the staff of our New York Public Library.

For about twenty years I have had the pleasure of being one of the force that looks after the interests and care of the thousands of readers who daily spend their time here gathering information in the large reference rooms, and to notice the transformation that has taken place since prohibition went into effect.

Before the prohibition act became a law, almost daily there were to be found a number of drunks or half-drunks sneaking into the various rooms to occupy the comfortable chairs and space for no other purpose than to doze off the effects of the poison they had drunk. Again and again these victims had to be ordered out or put out, and frequent complaints were made by our respectable readers of those who had been drinking liquor.

After prohibition began to take effect, and thence on year after year, this class of loafers began to disappear, now they are almost as scarce as white mice. As to the stories now being circulated about the young people and students drinking so much since prohibition went into effect, such is not true and is propaganda by the wet element. Here in this library we have hundreds of young boy and girl students, day and night, coming to obtain help in their studies, who reside not only in the city, but out of town as well, and rarely have we seen the sign of such a thing as drink on one of them. -P. N. Johnston, in the New York Times.

But a Greater Than These Is Leve THERE are six fundamentals necessary even to a fair assurance of world peace:

1. The codification of international law, or the framing of the simple rules of fair play under which the civilized powers agree to live.
2. The outlawry of war.

Infallible Sign of Spring

SIGNS of spring are about. Newspapers, shop windows, and the air hold a hint. Spring flutters about the horizon, timidly, and you must not look at it or it will vanish. It is an intimation, not a reality. It is cautious, and sends its heralds far in advance to excite us over the approach. It sends in one breeze a fresh and delicate scent that deludes us, and in the next a sharp bite to reprimand our impatience. Trees and plants begin to stir with fresh life, and boys play marbles in alleyways. Someone sees a new bloom that never, never precedes spring itself, and that night the mercury may seek the freezing point. . . .

What is the infallible sign? The matter can always be settled simply by turning to the page of sports. "The pitching staff is limbering itself slowly, Manager Name told this correspondent today, but all in all, he thinks the chances are good for at least three aces. Socko Slam has found his eye and is chasing outfielders all over the practice lot." It is news from the training camps, and we know what it means at once.

Justice or Sport?

THE harm done by the shyster lawyer and the profes-I sional bondsman in warding off punishment in cases where it should be inflicted is well known. They render undue aid and assistance to the man who is guilty. They do not hesitate to exploit the unfortunate man who is

Thus our machinery for the trial of criminal cases tends to give undue benefits to the guilty and to place unnecessary hardships upon the innocent. Not even this statement does full justice to the situation.

Our sporting theory of justice, our overemphasis upon the rules of the game, transform the judge into a mere ringside referee whose business is not to concern himself with whether or not the case reaches the proper result, but merely to see that the contestants do not overstep the rules while the game is on. —Rollin M. Perkins, in the Milwaukee Journal.

American "Movies" and the World

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: It was with much interest that I read Mary Pickford's first article on motion pictures in the Monitor. The con-crete suggestions made therein will be helpful to those of us who wish to do something which may improve present Although the writer has never registered a complaint against poor pictures at the box office, she has, whenever possible, tried to support good ones. There are so few, however, that might be included in that class. How often have some of us been driven away, discouraged by the glaring titles that are frequently suggestive of questionable situations!

That the motion picture is a potent vehicle for good, if rightly employed, there is no doubt. Pictures such as "Ben Hur" and "The King of Kings" teach valuable lessons that might make little impression if conveyed by moralizers in the pulpit; and the fact that these were well supported seems to prove that there is a public receptive to better things.

Recently an eminent English journalist, in discussing foreign relations, made the astonishing, but quite credible statement that "Hollywood interprets America to the world." Foreign masses receive their impressions of the United States through the motion picture, the lecturer explained, and these are not always favorable. That all Americans are millionaires is an idea which multitudes of Europeans have gotten from the perverted aspect of American photoplays. And is it not true that they often portray the people of the United States as extravagant and somewhat scandalous inhabitants of gorgeous palaces? That is the reason why some feel that the United States could easily cancel the war debts. For a nation abounding in wealth, such a gesture would be a mere bagatelle. If such erroneous impressions are being widely disseminated, are not the "movies" indeed

"everybody's" business?

Let us hope that before long the change that Miss Pickford prognosticates will come; and aroused public opinion will demand pictures that will show the United MARGUERITE HUNZIKES
